A few years ago, CalDav has grown a lot, and now most of the major software have their own implementation. It makes it easier for people to follow the changes. Exporting to CalDav and CardDav is one of them. Here are my two cents: What is CalDav? CalDav is a CalDAV-implemented protocol for shared calendars and contacts. It's defined by iCalendar, the de-facto standard for calendaring and contact synchronization. Why CalDav? A majority of the big cloud services allow syncing calendars and contacts between multiple devices. CalDav allows you to export/import calendar and addressbook to another client. On top of that, the program is available as both a browser extension (on the Chrome, Firefox and Opera browsers) and a plugin for Microsoft Outlook. In conclusion, We have discovered that the application has a clean and intuitive user interface, a friendly way to manage the records and a set of basic features that guarantee users a good experience during the entire process.
