If the result is announced, too close to the examination, the fairness of the examination procedure could be questioned. On the other hand, if the result is announced too far ahead of the examination, it would deprive the examinees of sufficient time to prepare and clear all the questions. This year, when the assessment day for the Jamb examination was announced, the examination results were announced within 15 days. The delay in announcing the results, however, did not affect the fairness of the examination and the integrity of the results as it was undertaken under strict guidelines. That was the point being stated by the National Council. Those candidates who did not pass the examination this year, and who are now wondering what course to take, mustn't lose sleep over it. The national council will continue to check the results, and the Board of Examiners will assess them. This arrangement will continue to ensure that the results don't come too close to the Jamb examination date.Australian F3 Championship The Australian F3 Championship is a motor racing championship for single-seat race cars. It was introduced in 2013 to replace the Formula Ford category. The championship is organised by Australian Motor Racing Club under the aegis of the Confederation of Australian Motor Sport. Unlike Formula Ford, the championship provides a semi-pro pathway to the Australian Supercars Championship and has been won by Supercars drivers including Nick Percat, who raced in the championship until the series' demise at the end of the 2014 season, and Jack Smith, who raced in the championship's later years. Both men went on to race in the Virgin Australia Supercars Championship. Since its re-introduction in 2013, the championship has been contested over six rounds. From 2014 onwards the series expanded to a full eight rounds, with each round being contested at a different meeting.
