Octopus Micro Finance Suite is an application designed to simplify the work of accountants by providing them with a wide variety of useful tools that they can rely on. Now, however, France is in the grip of a far greater storm than bad weather. Literally. After the devastating tragedy in Nice, a group of increasingly small shopkeepers has opted for a campaign of 'No-Go' zones. In effect, in the belief that no one in the town will shop there, they are allowing the fear to destroy their livelihoods. As a former departmental health inspector, I can testify to the very real psychological impact on people in such areas, and I have worked alongside doctors to treat the very real damage done by these terrible places. They are not an accident. They are the work of one man, Jean-Marie Le Pen, leader of the Front National. When he was asked to leave the Front National, he was passed over to the extreme right. True, he had not been a prolific speech-maker, as his successor Jean-Marie Le Pen, obviously, had been, but the Front National had been a force in French political life. Now in control of the party, Jean-Marie Le Pen founded the Movement for France (Mouvement pour la France or MFP) in 1969. A 'list for the coming of the French revolution', they now claim, calling for a French invasion of Iraq. I can see exactly what they are trying to do with their statements. It is France's King Henry II who is said to have spoken of "the birds of the air and the beasts of the earth", and this phrase is now back in vogue with Front National supporters. The National Front, as they refer to themselves, have now stated that: "Our party will soon announce a very big change of policy. With 'The Birds of the Air' in mind, we propose the introduction of a campaign of free expropriation of land, beginning in a zone near the frontiers and closing in on the south, to allow the land to be cultivated, and thereby provide work and a livelihood for the unemployed." This, then, is the strategy of land expropriation. It appeals to the worst instincts of the French, the French being the world's most xenophobic
