Towards a molecular basis of neurodegeneration: application of protein tyrosine phosphatases to signal transduction and degeneration. The deregulation of protein tyrosine phosphorylation is a key event in the pathogenesis of numerous neurodegenerative diseases, including Huntington's disease, Alzheimer's disease and amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS). Recently, molecular biological studies have revealed that PTPS are one of the most common regulators of signal transduction pathways that are involved in regulating these complex pathophysiologicals. PTPS have been shown to negatively regulate phosphorylation-dependent signal transduction pathways in neurons, resulting in the formation of protein aggregates, and in the facilitation of the aggregation of other proteins including the amyloid precursor protein, which itself becomes phosphorylated at Tyr-682. The purpose of this review is to explore the physiological role of protein tyrosine phosphatases in neurons
