Make a copy of your image before you do anything, or if you're working with a RAW file, it's even better to make a copy first. Doing a Search and Replace The Replace dialog box (Figure 5-6) is a powerful tool for editing and manipulating images without having to open the file in Photoshop, learn how it works, or even make any changes. It enables you to make quick changes in the background of a picture and then replace it with another image, replacing just the image in the middle of your background with a different image. Instead of editing the file itself, you just tell the Find & Replace dialog box where to look for and replace the color in the selected area. You can fine-tune the results of the search by adjusting the search pattern of the image's location, allowing you to get specific parts of your picture. You can even use text to search for words or characters in your images, and then quickly replace the background with another picture. FIGURE 5-6: The Replace dialog box enables you to replace your background with different pictures. To view the results of the search, all you need to do is click the Open button in the Find & Replace dialog box, and the Replace command kicks in and does all the work for you, instantly replacing the selected background. To open the dialog box, choose Edit Find & Replace, or press Ctrl+F (Windows) or +F (Mac). When the dialog box appears, choose From File or From Cloud or From Web. If the dialog box is on a Mac and you want to search a photo on your hard drive, choose From File. It's important to note that in order to have a photo to replace the background, you must first open the image in Photoshop so it's in the Layers panel. Suppose, for example, that you opened

Q: A friend turned in my answers to the Java Cipher without telling me I had a series of discussions about cryptanalysis with someone on stack overflow. I was later told by my friend that he turned in my answers to the Java Cipher without telling me. Is this allowed? Is this considered correct etiquette? I posted the code for a cipher he claims is weak. He posted his cryptanalysis of it on his own note. Does he have a right to do this? Does it mean he will also be able to claim credit for the code? How should I respond to this? A: Is this allowed? There's not really anything to it, since it was not a study or anything but rather someone was trying to help you find a flaw or exploit in your code? Is this considered correct etiquette? As long as it's not on your account or your behalf, then who cares. But there's nothing wrong with helping someone that you do not know. Does he have a right to do this? No, because it's not on your behalf or your account. Does it mean he will also be able to claim credit for the code? No. How should I respond to this? There's nothing you can do as long as it wasn't on your behalf or your account. But you could ask them if they wouldn't want to keep it on their own note. Since there's nothing wrong with helping someone you don't know. It's not as if it's a co-authored code. 2020-2021 ACEP Announces Workforce Health Safety Successes The American College of Emergency Physicians (ACEP) is now accepting physician critiques of the 2020-2021 annual Accreditation Center for Emergency Medicine (ACEP) Annual Review. Srinagar, Jan.12 (ANI): About 60 per cent of Kashmiri students are afraid of attending schools and universities as mob violence against them has come to a peak in the Valley. "More than 60 per cent students in Kashmir are afraid of attending schools and institutions as mob violence against them is at its peak in the Valley. Safety measures such as red corridor and barricades are not in place," said Chairman of Centre for Development Studies (CDS) Ram Sahgal. "CDS has received hundreds of phone calls about the incidents of violence against students, shopkeepers and cattle on public roads leading to schools and colleges," he added. The statewide protest against the detention of five people by police in a case of cow slaughter was intensified on the call of All Parties Hurriyat Conference (APHC) and militant groups, including Hizbul Mujahideen, demanding their release. Scores of youth, mainly students, and some activists clashed with security forces and baton charged on roads in the Bandipora, Baramula and Handwara areas in south Kashmir on the protest. "In most of the areas, people are protesting against the government for arresting the five persons," said Kamal Bhat, a shopkeeper, Srinagar. More than 50 people have been injured in the clashes between police and agitators in the district. Bhat claimed that three persons have died in the clashes. "We demand the government to look into the issue and help the families of the victims," he said.NEW YORK — We wish for something more than a prediction, a guarantee or a hunch. We wish for change. Such wishes might seem improbable or inconsequential in the wake of Donald Trump's upset of Hillary Clinton. But Americans are optimistic in a way that should be tested over the coming months. Our forecasters, who rightly point to the fall polls as the only firm data points on the future, are not yet concerned about the results of the elections. They see an opportunity, not an opportunity to beat the odds. Our economists hope for an economic rebound. And a recession is certainly plausible. Even if it does not happen, the long-standing age of economic growth will come to a close. A future of stagnant wages and much more expensive health care will force the American economy into an age of stagnation and less productive use of productive resources. And political moves
