WASHINGTON — Sen. Cory Booker is adding William Weld to his growing list of 2020 presidential rivals. Booker, an outspoken critic of President Donald Trump and an early front-runner to run for the Democratic nomination, said on Thursday that the former Massachusetts governor is joining the "growing group of folks" he's considering. "I'm really honored to have the support and the warm regards of friends like Gov. Weld," he said. "And we don't know what 2020 holds, but I'm really honored to be considered as he works to re-establish, under a truly different administration, all the ideals that were the backbone of the Republican Party, the backbone of our country, the backbone of the Republican Party." Weld told CBS News on Wednesday that while he has not made up his mind about running, he's been in discussions with a group of Republican donors about giving money to a potential campaign. "I think there's a lot of people in the GOP that feel that way," he said. Weld, who lost the 2016 Republican primary to then-presidential candidate Donald Trump, has faced speculation that he could back Trump in a bid for president. "I voted for him [Trump] and I would do it again. I mean, it's pretty sad to see the American people are such wimps these days they're afraid to even use the name American anymore," Weld told CBS. "Because I think we're really smart people we got the right guy in the White House." Booker announced on Sunday that he would be joining the Democratic presidential field and has since then described himself as a "proud progressive." court abused its

Consequently, the appeal and writ of mandamus are not subject to the same rules. While the trial court judgment is final with respect to Relator's right to a writ of mandamus, the order appealed from is final with respect to the appealability of the order denying his application. Therefore, we
